GREAT FOOD, POOR SERVICE

I came here for dinner with my family for the first time. This was a very nice restaurant with international cuisine. The Thai dish we ordered was tasty with lots of flavor.

The service was below standard, though.

We called to book a table for four. But when we arrived at 7.00 p.m., we had to wait almost 15 minutes before our table was ready. Actually, the restaurant was only half full, so there was no reason to make us wait at all. Worse than that, they don't seem to care about us waiting for so long.

After ordering the main dishes, it took more than 20 minutes for them to arrive. That means we had to wait for more than half an hour before we could start our meal.

After dinner, I ordered a cup of hot coffee. When I tasted it, it was too terrible to drink. I asked the waiter if I could change or return it, but he just said no. He didn't offer to help or take it off our bill. When we left, we decided not to leave a tip.

Although the food was great, our experience at Brawn was quite disappointing. We decided never to come back again.

- 1) report bad news
- 2) describe a place

- 4) complain about a service

28. How did the family find the Thai dish they ordered?

- (1) A research study revealed that people with a healthy lifestyle before becoming infected with COVID-19 had a lower risk of COVID-19 symptoms that last for a month or longer.
- (2) Volunteers that had a healthier lifestyle had almost half the risk of long COVID as those who had a less healthy lifestyle. The researchers said this was mainly due to healthy body weight and adequate sleep. The volunteers with a healthier lifestyle who come down with long COVID had about 30% lower risk of symptoms that interfered with their daily lives.
- (3) There were six lifestyle factors that the researchers used as criteria for analyzing the data: a body-mass index, smoking habits, alcohol consumption; diet, amount of nightly sleep, and regular physical activity. However, the researchers noted that findings of the study were still inconclusive because of a limited number of volunteers participating in the study.
- (4) Previous studies have also linked lifestyle factors with the risk of severe COVID-19 Infection, hospitalization, or death. Part V: General Articles (Items 45-60)

Directions: Read the following articles and choose the best answer for each question.

Article 1

(1) Cultural differences affect the way companies in different countries do business. For instance, when as an applicant for a job appears uneasy during an interview, Western potential employers tend to see that the interviewee as unsuitable for stressful jobs. However, in an Eastern firm, the interviewers are likely to see that the uneasiness is due to a stressful situation and is not related to the character of the applicant. Also, North American businesspeople usually expect a trustworthy person to respond to their question immediately, and they would feel mistrust if there is any delay in responding. Japanese businesspeople, on the other hand, tend to have a favorable view towards a person who takes time to ponder before giving a reply.

(2) Attitudes towards contracts can also vary according to cultures. After a contract has been signed, Western businesspeople normally regard it as an agreement set in stone, whereas their Eastern counterparts such as the Japanese, are likely to take a more flexible view so that they are ready to renegotiate if circumstances change in order to maintain a long-term relationship.

(3) In the East, consensus and harmony are very important values; therefore, Western businesspeople sometimes perceive Japanese managers as indecisive or incompetent since they continually consult their team and are usually unwilling to challenge decisions made by others. There is an example from a Scottish executive who was put in charge of a Japanese company by

ชื่อ:

เบอร์โทร:

01

A-Level 82 อังกฤษ มี.ค. 66

the parent company in the U.K. Because he came from a Western culture, he was accustomed to debate, discussion, and disagreement before arriving at decisions. In the Japanese firm, he found it very frustrating when his senior managers were reluctant to disagree with one another.

(4) Meetings in Western companies have formal agendas that set the order in which items are discussed, and each item is expected to be resolved before proceeding to the next. The Japanese, however, may prefer a more flexible approach enabling them to get a better overview. To Western businesspeople, meetings in Japan may appear unstructured and chaotic, but Japanese managers are quite used to such ambiguity.

(5) Different negotiation styles can also be seen between Western and Eastern cultures. Western businesspeople try to achieve the most beneficial outcomes for themselves, while their Japanese counterparts expect that harmony will lead to the resolution of details. Such differences can lead to bad feelings in negotiations.

(6) Research has revealed fundamental cultural differences between Eastern and Western companies. Psychologists have explained that Eastern and Western cultures can differ significantly in terms of perception, logic, and how they see the world around them. Whereas Westerners focus more on detail, Easterners tend to look at things on a whole. Thus, companies have to take cultural differences into consideration as they plan to enter foreign markets through exports, joint ventures, takeovers, or investments. If the domestic and foreign cultural norms and values are similar, it might be easier for international business, but if there are large differences between the two cultures, major difficulties are likely to occur due to misunderstanding and conflict.

ชื่อ:

เบอร์โทร:

45. What is the main idea of the passage?

- 1) Cultural differences are increasing as a result of miscommunication.
- 2) Cultural differences can have a negative effect on business communication.
- 3) Western and Eastern cultures will become similar due to globalization.
- 4) Western and Eastern cultures mainly differ in terms of negotiation styles.

46. According to the first paragraph, how a job applicant appears during an interview

_____.

- 1) is usually considered negative
- 2) may be interpreted differently
- 3) shows his or her attitude towards the job
- 4) can reveal his or her previous work experience

47. Which of the following statements is true about Japanese businesspeople?

- 1) They tend to think that a contract that has been signed can be changed.
- 2) They tend to think that benefits are more important than harmony in a negotiation.
- 3) They would expect that an individual gives a quick reply to a question.
- 4) They would expect that there are debates and discussions in every meeting.

48. The phrase "set in stone" (in paragraph 2) is closest in meaning to

_____.

- 1) natural
- 2) different
- 3) unsuitable
- 4) unchangeable

01

A-Level 82 อังกฤษ มี.ค. 66

49. When Japanese managers seem unwilling to disagree with others, they

_____.

- 1) can make Western businesspeople feel more confident
- 2) can make other Japanese businesspeople feel very angry
- 3) may be considered incapable by Western businesspeople
- 4) may be considered insincere by other Japanese businesspeople

50. In a meeting, Japanese businesspeople do NOT tend to _____.

- 1) follow an agenda strictly
- 2) communicate ambiguously
- 3) get an overview of the issues
- 4) discuss a solution to a problem

51. What is the main organizational pattern of the above passage?

- 1) Fact-opinion
- 2) Specific-general
- 3) Problem-solution
- 4) Comparison-contrast

52. We can conclude from the last paragraph that those interested in doing international business

_____.

- 1) can reduce problems about cultural differences
- 2) can carry out more research on cultural differences
- 3) should consider cultural differences very carefully
- 4) should enter a foreign market with no cultural differences

Are your cats having fun or fighting? Here are some ways to tell

Are your cats play fighting or fighting for real?

(1) It turns out that certain behaviors in domestic cats could be telltale signs that an interaction is friendly, aggressive or something in between. researchers report January 26 in Scientific Reports.

(2) "It is a question we hear a lot from cat owners," says cat behavior expert Mikel Delgado of Feline Minds, a cat behavior consulting company in Sacramento, Calif., who was not involved in the study. "So I was excited to see that researchers are taking on this topic."

(3) Scientists have studied cats' social relationships - both with other cats and humans -- but it can be tricky to tell whether two cats are playing or fighting, says veterinarian and cat behavior researcher Noema Gajdoš- Kmecová of the University of Veterinary Medicine and Pharmacy in Košice, Slovakia.

(4) Sometimes cat owners miss the signs of a tense relationship because they think their pets are just playing, which can lead to stress and illness in the animals, she says. Other times, owners rehome their cats after incorrectly assuming their pets are fighting.

(5) To assess and categorize interactions, Gajdoš-Kmecová and colleagues watched about 100 videos of different cats interacting in pairs. After viewing around one-third of the videos, Gajdoš-Kmecová identified six types of behaviors, including wrestling and staying still. She then watched all of the videos and noted how often each cat exhibited one of the specified behaviors, and for how long. By running statistical analyses on the behaviors, she pinpointed three types of interactions between the cat pairs: playful, aggressive and intermediate.

(6) To confirm the outcome, other members of the team also watched the videos and classified each interaction between felines.

ชื่อ:

เบอร์โทร:

01

A-Level 82 อังกฤษ มี.ค. 66

(7) Some clear connections emerged. Quietly wrestling, for instance, suggested playtime, whereas chasing and vocalizations, like growling, hissing or gurgling, implied aggressive encounters.

(8) Intermediate interactions had elements of both playful and aggressive encounters, but especially included prolonged activity of one cat toward the other, such as pouncing on or grooming its fellow feline. These in-between encounters could hint that one cat wants to keep playing while the other doesn't, with the more playful cat gently nudging to see if its partner wants to continue, the authors say.

(9) This work provides initial insights into cat interactions, Gajdoš-Kmecová says, but it's just the start. In the future, she plans to study more subtle behaviors, like ear twitches and tail swishes. Both Gajdoš-Kmecová and Delgado also stress that one contentious encounter doesn't necessarily signal a cat-apocalyptic relationship.

(10) "This is not just about one interaction," Gajdoš-Kmecová says. Owners "really should look into the different, multiple interactions in multiple periods of life of the cats and then put it into context."

53. This article mainly discusses _____.

- 1) how cats' manners are evaluated
- 2) how cats interact with other cats and people
- 3) how owners determine cats' social relationships
- 4) how certain behaviors hint at how your cat feels about another cat

ชื่อ:

เบอร์โทร:

54. It can be inferred from the passage that _____.

- 1) it is impossible to tell whether cats are in good or bad moods
- 2) cats do not vary their behaviors according to different circumstances
- 3) a more playful cat has a strategy to see if its partner is also in a playful mood
- 4) many cat owners do not understand cats' interactional behaviors and their associated feelings

55. The research study was published in _____.

- 1) a pet lover magazine
- 2) a California newspaper
- 3) a journal titled 'Scientific Reports'
- 4) the University of Veterinary Medicine and Pharmacy Reports

56. The phrase 'the specified behaviors' (in paragraph 5) refers to _____.

- 1) wrestling and staying still
- 2) playful, aggressive and intermediate interactions
- 3) types of behaviors emerging from all of the videos
- 4) six types of behaviors identified from approximately 33 videos

57. Which of the following is true according to the passage?

- 1) Mikel Delgado is part of the Slovak research team.
- 2) The researchers studied group behaviors of pet cats.
- 3) Cat wrestling does not always indicate negative relationships.
- 4) Cats use sounds to show their friendliness and playful moods.
